primary prevention – evaluation – PERK – internet – websites – information sources.

Abstract:

The internet offers currently a very easy access to the information from the field of primary prevention. The fundamental information regarding universal, selective and indicative primary prevention and the evaluation of preventive measures is available through EMCDDA, NCCDP and NIDA websites. Individual sites provide an overview of the terminology used in primary prevention, theoretical background, principles and approaches, good practice examples, recommended literature, studies and research findings. The EMCDDA website offers a new on-line tool for planning and implementing primary prevention measures and their evaluation (PERK). Other web links present websites of selected European institutions and organizations providing information and counselling in the field of primary prevention of drug use. The EMCDDA, NCCDP and NIDA websites are available in English; other web links offer information from the field in other European languages.
